Utility Pole Safety

Covering utility poles with signs of any kind (lost animals, events, political influence) creates a serious safety hazard for our utility workers. Damaging the integrity of utility poles can impede TID's ability to deliver safe and reliable power. In addition to affecting the integrity of the utility poles, nails, screws, and tacks can interfere with lineworkers' ability to safely climb utility poles and can lead to injuries. TID customers benefit from a strong and reliable electric infrastructure, resulting in few outages and a quick recovery time on the occasion power is interrupted. Let's work together to ensure lineworkers can safely fulfill our mission of providing reliable power. To support TID's efforts, please keep signs off utility poles.

TID investments in ongoing inspection and maintenance of TID's vital power infrastructure is necessary to protect our operations and to provide reliable, safe service to our customers. For more information about TID's safety efforts, visit TID.org/Safety.
